Thrush offers corrosion protection that's second to none

Thrush powder-coats all their airframes, engine mounts and tripod landing gear, giving you a durable finish that lasts a lifetime. Powder-coating fights exposure to moisture and chemicals and its hard, tough coating doesn't fade and is incredibly chip and crack resistant. In addition, the aluminum parts on Thrush aircraft are treated to prevent corrosion. Their chromate chemical conversion process coats each part to improve corrosion resistance of the aluminum while providing an excellent base for painting. They even put an anti-corrosive hot linseed oil coating inside their interconnected 4130 steel tubes, engine mount, and throughout the airframe. Every one of their airframes features over 100 stainless steel clips attached to the fuselage. And on the outside, they use Sherwin-Williams JET GLO for all painted parts because it's specially formulated to withstand the daily grind of harsh environments, while leaving a durable long lasting high gloss finish. No one ever said you couldn't look good while you work.
